Durham Hosts Community Engagement Session for Police HQ Public Art

Durham Artist David Wilson and National Artist Team RE:site to Create Public Art at New Facility

DURHAM, N.C. - The Durham Police Department Headquarters and Durham Emergency Communications Center will soon be home to new public art, and residents are now invited to give their input to help shape one of the pieces to be created by a Durham artist.

The Durham Police Department, Durham Emergency Communications Center, General Services Department, and the Cultural Advisory Board's Public Art Committee have selected David Wilson, a Durham-based artist, as well as national artist team Norman Lee and Shane Allbritton of RE:site to design and install public art at this facility.

The artist selection follows a participatory review process of 172 artist applications from across the United States. In order to ensure that a wide variety of voices were part of the selection process, an Artist Selection Committee was assembled to review submissions and help the City identify artists or artists-teams with the best qualifications to design, fabricate, and install public art for the project. This committee was comprised of a variety of neighborhood residents, local arts professionals, businesses, non-profit representatives, and representatives from relevant City departments.

To help Wilson create his public art piece, community members are encouraged to attend his upcoming Community Photography Event on Saturday, January 19 from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. at Durham Technical Community College's Main Campus, located at 1637 E. Lawson St., inside Building #10 in the Phail Wynn, Jr. Student Services Center's Multipurpose Room. Parking can be found across the street outside of Building #1. Attendees will be invited to pose for photographs and complete a short survey that Wilson will use to help shape his final mural design. If community members are unable to attend his event, but wish to give their input, they may also complete an online survey at <https://www.surveymonkey.com/r/9HR978Q> or email Wilson at infusedmedia05@gmail.com.

The RE:site team has already come to Durham to collect resident feedback on their public art piece, and their design is now underway. Durham Technical Community College has hosted several community engagement efforts for the RE:site and Wilson public art projects in partnership with the City of Durham.

Engagement activities for these artists to seek resident feedback have included in-depth community conversation sessions hosted at Durham Technical Community College, which were completed over a three-week period in 2018; a digital public survey underway now; and Wilson's upcoming community photography event.

According to Durham Technical Community College Assistant Vice President Connie Gómez-Joiner, their school wanted to participate by hosting several of these events to help encourage productive dialogue around public art in this new facility. "I'm excited that Durham Tech and the City partnered together to engage community members in authentic conversations about the different concepts and meanings of peace,” said Gómez-Joines. “These conversations will hopefully inspire the design of new pieces of public art that are truly reflective of the Durham community.”

For more information about the process for selecting these artists, contact Special Projects Manager Stacey Poston with the City’s General Services Department at (919) 560-4197, ext. 21254 or Stacey.Poston@DurhamNC.gov.

About the Artists

David Wilson's work in public art explores the connection between architecture, nature, and the public. The story of community and place is the primary driver of his installations. Wilson has experience as an artist-in-residence for the Durham County Detention Center and Durham County Youth Home and received commissions throughout the state including the Black Wall Street mural at Phoenix Square, the Gantt Center for African American Arts + Culture, Kinston Music Park, and the City of Gastonia. Wilson is currently completing state-based commissions for Chavis Memorial Park, the Arts & Science Council, and the new Durham Admin Building II. He also serves as Public Art Consultant for GoTriangle, assisting in the creation of original art for new transit shelters throughout Durham. The Durham-based artist is also an accomplished fine artist with works in many notable private and celebrity collections.

Allbritton and Lee, co-founders of RE:site, explore notions of community, identity, and narrative in the context of public space. According to the artists, they create dynamic, multi-layered works that draw on a site’s cultural landscape to generate strong narrative concepts that resonate with local meanings, but also transform and transcend the familiar to converge in a site-specific context. The Houston-based team has been awarded public art commissions across the country, including police and fire departments. In 2003, Lee was named a finalist in the World Trade Center Site Memorial Competition.
